A PARIS NOCTURNE.

"The price will do."
"Monsieur is most kind."
"And—ah—tenec, madame. This is the fifth, I believe?"
"No, monsieur," simpered the landlady, slightly drooping her eyes.
"Did you told me," began the gentleman with the Bohemian air, Greek nose and shaggy blond curls, "you told me, madame?"
"Yes, monsieur," Mme. Toudouche half stammered. "I—I had forgotten. At the fifth there is a room occupied, and monsieur desired this floor, the fourth, to be quite vacant."
"Yes," loitered the reply. With a remarkably white hand, though large and muscular, the gentleman stroked a clear chiseled chin. Suddenly, with this same hand, he made a sweeping gesture: "I will take all the little suit. But, mind you, I hope for quiet during the week that I am here. I shall rest and drowse most of the time. I shall have no visitors—absolutely none. Frankly, I shall be in retreat. An absorbing affair—a matter of business, most wearisome business—will soon engage me, and hence I am taking this preparatory term of repose. You are sure I shall not be disturbed, madame—absolutely sure?"
"Oh, yes, monsieur, absolutely."
"My name is—er—Duroc—M. Albert Duroc."
"Thank you, monsieur."
"Please let my luggage be sent up. You have no doubt perceived that it is very small. I shall ask you for a cup of coffee each morning—good, strong coffee—a roll and a bit of butter. Pray, let all three be excellent. Stay, madame." And here M. Duroc glanced about him at the shabby but clean apartment. "Perhaps you would prefer that I should give you half my promised sum in advance." He then drew out a purse, and as he did so the old woman's wrinkled face became one immense labyrinthine smile.
After she had gone M. Duroc leaned from one of his high dormer windows and looked at Paris below the slumberous arms of a perfect autumn afternoon. Youder was the Ile St. Louis, with Notre Dame to wear that one could almost make out the grimaces of its ghastly gargoyles. Ah, dear old Notre Dame, with its adorable sculptures of its main doorway, saints and martyrs all tangled together like roses in a huge wreath! Dear old "other side of the river!" What thrilling memories it evoked! There would the unforgettable and unique Seine, with its little toylike steamboats, bound for Charenton, for Strennes, for numberless ports besides. And the stately fawn colored buildings on either bank, skirting so pathetically each curvilinear verge. Ah, the delicious days of boyhood! And to be here once again where he had, dwell for so many youthful years! What refreshment after the loud, bustling life of that other Paris, whose boulevards and cafes and theaters and salons teemed with a thousand ambitions, rivalries, hates!

"I will dine over here near the Luxembourg," meditated M. Duroc, "in a little restaurant which has long ago forgotten my existence. Then I will come back to my placid refuge and enjoy the first serene sleep of seven others, all of which, I hope, will be equally serene. Ah, what comfort to be hidden away like this! After Monday next my work must begin. Meanwhile rest, rest, rest before the tremendous task that awaits me."

Later M. Duroc followed out his intent. He took a stroll through obscure yet familiar streets for nearly an hour after dining and then resought his new lodgings. He was a light sleeper, yet a beautiful one. Hardly five minutes after blowing out his candle he had fallen into just the snore slumber that he craved.

"La-la-la—la lah—la-la-la—tira, tira, tira—lah—la-la—tira, tira, tira—lah-r-r-r-r!"

Then the tinkle, tinkle, tinkle and thrum, thrum, thrum of a piano; then the women's voice and also the piano, both dawning together into awakened consciousness; then a man's basso voice, repeating every tira-tira, every lah, of the feminine one.

By this time M. Duroc was thoroughly awake. He soon lighted a candle and looked at his watch—ten minutes past midnight. The vocal exercises continued. Sleep was now impossible. He anathematized his landlady. Why had she dared to lie like this? Had she not promised him peace? The detested sounds came, too plainly, from a chamber just above him. At a quarter past 1 o'clock they ceased. Soon afterward he heard a man's step descend the staircase, passing his door.

The chain of sleep having been thus rudely broken, it was three good hours before he rejoined its disrupted links. He awoke at about 9 in the morning, full of indignant protest. Finding the landlady below stairs, he poured upon her a torrent of reproaches. Was it for this that she had accepted his advance payment? Had she not assured him that his lodgings should be quiet? Of course, all the while, she knew of these two owls up stairs, these midnight cats, with their bass and treble miaowings! And the piano, too—a ramshackle thing at best! Was this honest dealing? Was it not shameful deceit?

But the landlady could now afford to be a trifle haughty. Had she not those preparatory francs tightly clutched? "Monsieur is unjust to me, ma foi! I supposed that he would be fast asleep when they began. The young man never comes till midnight."

Duroc gave a groan and swept past his hostess. He hated all chicanery, and he resolved forthwith to quit the lodgings. Then his wound rankled. Those few extra francs were nothing, but the cool imposition of it all!

He would remain for one day more and a night at least. If the tira-tiras again woke him, as of course they could not fail to do, he would make of these nocturnal nuisances an emphatic request to keep silent. This would be wreaking a kind of vengeance on his landlady, for neither would she relish having her duplicity publicly disclosed nor would the fair repute of her inn be thereby enhanced.

"Perhaps, after all, though," mused Duroc, "I shall sleep through the clamors of tonight. If not, farewell forever to Mme. Toudouche."

At 10 that evening Duroc ascended his staircase with the intention of retiring. Scarcely had he closed his door when madame's somewhat plaintive voice caused him to reopen it.

"I am so sorry it has happened, monsieur. Of course I realized that monsieur has been perfectly right. I have not an idea who she is. Apparently, however, she is very poor. That touched my heart." And Mme. Toudouche made the motion of wiping away a tear.

"She says the gentleman is her brother. She pays very little for the room. The piano is her own. She had it brought up herself. And now, M. Duroc, I have come to assure you that you need only command and I will obey."

"Command? Obey, Mme. Toudouche?"

"Yes, monsieur. It is affixed that you should be kept awake like this. I will tell the young girl when she comes tonight that I shall require of her no further pay and that she must at once cease from these disturbing practices."

"What a poor little handful of sous that 'pay' must be!" thought Duroc, with irrepressible cynicism.

Somewhat, after the landlady had departed and while flinging himself into the only easy chair that his room contained, a twinge of conscience assailed him. Might he not, after all, be thwarting some purpose of self support on the part of this girl—just referred to as possibly very poor? There might be cogent reasons why she should hold with her brother these weird concerts. "Well, no matter what happens tonight," he meditated, "I will endure it. And tomorrow, if I have been annoyed as I was last night, I can make a charge of quarters. Meanwhile, the most merciful plan is to see Mme. Toudouche at once and tell her that she must restrain her veto; that it is my earnest wish."

But soon, as it happened, a drowsiness overtook him and he fell asleep there in the armchair. He was a man in perfect health, but for many past days he had been constitutionally tired by a peculiar pressure of work.

Wakening abruptly after what he felt to have been a long and wholly unforeseen nap, he heard the piano banging up stairs and the tira-tiras bleat with its notes.

Rubbing his eyes, he laughed aloud. "It's hard to be charitable," he muttered. "How strange I should have fallen asleep like this! I suppose it's my broken rest of last night."

He rose, with the immediate design

Did ever a woman experience true happiness until she bent over her rosy-cheeked babe, tired of play and forgetful of toys. Never. True happiness for a childless woman is nature's most emphatic impossibility. The world teems with otherwise happy wedded couples that only need the link of a babe's divided caresses to unite them in mutual happiness through all eternity. Any woman may assure herself of happy wifehood, long life, love, and the great blessing of motherhood, who will take proper care of her womanly-self, and resort to the right remedy for weakness and disease of the delicate organs peculiar to her sex.

The best of all-known remedies for the special weaknesses and diseases from which women suffer is Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It acts directly and only on the organs that bear the burdens of motherhood. It makes them strong and healthy. Taken during the expectant period it banishes the usual discomforts and makes baby's advent easy and almost painless. It insures a robust new-comer and an ample supply of natural nourishment. All good druggists sell it.

"It is my heart's desire," writes Mrs. M. E. Simpson, P. O. Box 31, Kinderhook, Columbia Co., N. Y., "to tell you what Dr. Pierce's medicine has done for me. Two years ago I was in a very bad state. I took time bottles in all of your 'Favorite Prescriptions.' I had been married five years and had not had any children. I now have a young son and Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription effected a positive cure. Words cannot express my gratitude for the relief from the great suffering I so long endured. I do not think I should be here today had it not been for Dr. Pierce's medicines."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets regulate the liver, stomach and bowels.

EXPORT AND IMPORT TRADE.

The statements of the Treasury Department show that the foreign commerce of the United States for the first ten months of the current year compares with that of the first ten months of 1896 as follows:

	1896.	1897.
Exports	$779,578,478	$859,080,691
Imports	$72,555,608	$68,794,259

There is an increase in the value of exports this year, which is mainly due to the advance in the price of wheat, but the imports exceed those of last year notwithstanding the increase in tariff schedules. In 1896 the exports of breadstuffs were about equal in tonnage to those of the present year, but the value of those exports in dollars was much less last year. The exports and imports of gold for the last ten months and the corresponding period in 1896 were as follows:

	1896.	1897.
Imports	$92,849,999	$24,413,529
Exports	$7,218,014	$2,900,249

The exports and imports of gold in 1897 were greatly in excess of those of the present year, but the amount of gold in the Treasury this year is greater than it was last year, though the available cash in the Treasury is less now by several millions than it was a year ago.

The exports of silver for the ten months of 1896 were $51,269,880, and for the first ten months of the current year $47,572,686. The low price of silver this year, the average being about 56 cents an ounce, reduced the value of the export materially. Had silver been worth its coinage value Europe would have to pay twice as much and the silver producing States would be better off and the whole country more prosperous. Why any party in this country should do all in its power to depress the price of silver, of which we produce more than any other nation, is beyond the comprehension of ordinary mortals and even those who advocate that policy can give no rational explanation for doing so. What would be thought of a political party that would attempt by legislation to reduce the price of wheat in the interest of Europe, yet that is what the Republicans are doing with silver, though the metal is an American product fully as much as wheat, and one is as much entitled to consideration as the other. Surely the miners deserve well of the Government and should not be discriminated against by a great political party for the benefit of European bondholders and money lenders and their agents in the United States.

PROBABLY NO FINANCIAL LEGISLATION.

Reports from Washington indicate that there may be no financial legislation whatever attempted at the ensuing session of Congress. The free silver men are determined to prevent, if possible, the passage of an act retiring greenbacks and making all Government obligations payable in gold. These obligations are now redeemable in coin, that is in gold or standard dollars at the option of the Government, and legislation to make them redeemable in gold exclusively would be unpopular with the masses of the people, though the money trust would give millions to have it accomplished. The Republicans knowing that it would be unjust to make all obligations payable in gold, and that the people would resent it, do not think it wise to make the attempt.

That bills will be introduced to restrain trusts by restricting their powers there is no doubt, but it is not probable that any of them will become laws. The sugar, oil and many other trusts have their agents in Congress, and that they will combine their forces to defeat objectionable measures there is no doubt.

There will probably be less extravagance in appropriations than at the last session, as the expenditures are far in excess of the revenues, and Chairman Cannon of the Appropriations Committee in the House of Representatives says he will do all in his power to reduce expenses. A new Congress will be elected next year and the House will be on its good behavior, for the leaders fear that the people next November will take the reins in their own hands and defeat the Republicans if they issue more bonds or attempt to displace greenbacks, which draw no interest from the Government, with bank notes, based on interest-bearing bonds.

It is now estimated that over 400,000 innocent people have suffered death from starvation and disease directly attributable to the war in Cuba and these figures do not include those killed in battle or the thousands of women and children who have died in the swamps. Just think of this awful sacrifice of human beings and all within a few hours travel of the United States, yet the President and Cabinet will foot away time on a doubtful proposition of affording relief to the Klondike sufferers.

The police authorities in an Eastern city stopped the proposed marriage of a couple of fools, who had arranged to have the ceremony performed in a den of lions. The police should be censured. It was an interference with the right of voluntary idiots to be chewed up by indignant animals.—Record-Union.

TELEGRAPHIC NOTES.

The gold output of the Cripple Creek district for November was $1,258,000, the largest in one month in the history of the camp.

Chief Hazen of the Secret Service has apprehended and arrested Frank Holland and Mary Mahoney of Chicago for counterfeiting five and ten-dollar notes.

Senator Hanna was worse yesterday. His physicians announce that he is suffering from a severe headache and will not be able to go to Washington at present.

Martin Thorn, the condemned murderer, has confessed to the murder of Wm. Guldensuppe and says that he would make up his mind to meet the worst. His lawyer denies that he has confessed.

Colonel W. D. Shipley of Florida died at Washington yesterday after an operation for Carbuncle. He was about 60 years of age and was noted in mercantile and transportation circles in Florida.

The Grand Jury at Kansas City will consider the charges against the officers of the defunct Missouri National Bank. The bank failed with a million and a half of deposits, on November 30, 1896.

Charles Warren, ex-President of the Globe Savings Bank, was sentenced at Chicago yesterday to an indefinite term in the penitentiary. He was charged with embezzling funds of the University of Illinois.

Mr. S. H. Clark, one of the receivers of the Union Pacific, announced yesterday that he had been offered the Presidency of that company by the Reorganization Committee, but owing to poor health has refused the position.

The Interstate Commerce Commission opened the hearing for the railroads, which have petitioned for an extension of time in which they may comply with the law of 1893, requiring the equipment of cars and engines with automatic car couplers.

H. Harris, a batter in San Francisco, was hurled from a train near San Rafael and in falling his right foot was caught by a wheel and completely skinned and badly crushed. He laid at the side of the track all night, part of the time in an unconscious condition. His recovery is doubtful.

THE RETIRED BURGLAR.

His Curious Experience in a House With Creaking Stairs.

"You know how the stairs puff up," said the retired burglar, "after you stop using 'em nights? You crowd 'em down close together, solid, treading on 'em all day long, and then when you let up on 'em the fibers of the wood lift up again, and the stairs seem to swell. You know how they creak sometimes and snap a little when you go down 'em first in the morning and some of the steps yield a little under the tread? That's them settling down into place again."

"I love to hear 'em in the morning. It seems kind of like the stairs waking up and speaking to you as you go along down. But I don't like to hear 'em at night. And at the time I go about they've had a chance to do considerable puffing, and no matter how velvet footed a man may be he can't lessen curly to tread near the wall or near the banisters going up stairs, and not on the bow in the middle. The creak, or the little soft snapping, that sounds so pleasant in the morning and that nobody wouldn't notice then, sounds mighty loud at night, when everything is still. If anybody was awake, you know, you could hear it from one end of the house to the other. To be sure, it might not alarm anybody, because there's other sounds in a house at night—sounds that just make themselves, dog, I suppose, to changes in temperature. Boards swell and shrink and shift a little, and you might hear a little snap somewhere in the house any time of night. But I always liked to hear the stairs creak when I was going up 'em, all the same, because I always thought that as likely as not it would wake up somebody, and that I should find somebody sitting up in bed looking for me when I looked into the door of a room, and, as a matter of fact, that did sometimes happen."

"I looked one night, after a wretched pair of stairs, into a half lighted room where I saw a man, sitting up in bed, over on the other side of the room, and looking plumb at the door that I was standing in. As I told you, I was always on the lookout for just this thing, but this man surprised me, for all that. He sat there in bed all keyed up, and looking square at me. I could see him perfectly plain, and I knew he could see me just as plain, and I expected every minute he'd find his voice and begin to holler."

"But instead of that he threw the clothes back off his legs and swung his legs around out of bed and stood up. He put his right hand out to locate a chair that stood by the head of the bed, and then he started for the door, hands out a little on each side of him, and feeling out a little on both sides and sort of ahead of him as he came along."

"Humph! Blind. He'd heard the noise and was going to look for it. I might have stood there and slugged him easy as he went by, but I didn't want no rattle with a blind man. I just went out and left him there looking."—New York Sun.

IN THE LONG AGO.

When the St. Louis Spaniards Marched Against the Michigan English.

A Spanish army came to Chicago in the long ago. The minor details of it and the finer statecraft reasons of it are hidden in the catacombs of the Escurial along with tons of other documents that will never see the light again. But we know that those men of war marched over the Illinois prairies, and that they were sent to increase the dominions of their sovereigns.

By the treaty of Paris, signed in 1763, France ceded to Spain all of that vast territory known as Louisiana, which stretched from the mouth of the Mississippi to the Canadian line. In 1781 Great Britain was at war with the United States, Spain, Holland and France. St. Louis was a Spanish town, and English officers attacked it at the head of 1,500 Indians. They were defeated with little trouble and retreated.

In revenge the Spanish commander at St. Louis, which his people called "San Luis de Illinois," planned a raid against the British post of St. Joseph. It was a fort or outpost, located at a point two miles from the present city of Benton Harbor, Mich., and 60 miles northwest of Chicago, across the lake. The force began its long, difficult and dangerous journey on Jan. 2, 1781. They estimated the distance at 220 leagues, or 660 miles, and subsequent surveys have proved that they were remarkably good guessers. It was officered by Captain Eugenio Fure, commanding, and Lieutenant Carlos Tayon. The interpreter was Luis Chevalier. Chiefs Electorne and Nequigen led the 60 Indians of the Fox and Pottawatomie tribes. There were 65 Spanish volunteers, in all 180 men, selected with special reference to their ability to withstand the arduous journey.

They marched up the Mississippi river to the mouth of the Illinois and thence along the track of the French explorers and voyagers. The route took them up the Illinois river past Fort Creve Coeur (Peoria) to old Fort St. Louis (Starved Rock). Here they planted the blood stained banner of Aragon and Castile. A century before from that rocky eminence La Salle had unfurled the fleur-de-lis of France. Subsequently the British flag had waved over it. Now Old Glory waves there in peace and beauty.

Fure's force toiled in snow and ice to the junction of the Kankakee and Desplaines rivers. They followed the Desplaines to a point west of what is now South Chicago and came to the lake at its southern edge. They found it a desolate region of swamps and sand dunes. Thence they marched to their destination.

The small garrison of St. Joseph fled to Detroit at the news of their approach, and all of the stores fell into the hands of the invaders. They proclaimed the sovereignty of Spain over this section and divided the stores. After resting some days they began their return march over the former route. They reached St. Louis in safety after a midwinter march of nearly 1,400 miles through a hostile country. They had few casualties and gathered much plunder.—Chicago Chronicle.

Seventeen daily and weekly papers are published in the English language in Japan and over 100 on the Asiatic continent, while in all these countries there is only one German paper, the Ostasiatische Lloyd. A weekly German paper is soon to be issued in Japan.

BREVITIES.

Even Williams was a west-bound passenger last evening.

Miss Annie Martin, was an arrival from California yesterday.

Clarence Painter, the photographer, is confined to his home with an attack of pneumonia.

Reserve your seats for the "Black Flag" on Friday night. Seats are selling for 10, 20 and 30 cents.

Pork and bean lunch at Thyes' today. Oyster cocktails on the side and Upson tamales from noon to midnight.

Phillip Bussak and family, after many years residence in Reno, will depart for San Francisco, where they will reside.

The Reno Dramatic Club will give a splendid entertainment on Friday night, and they should receive a liberal patronage.

Regent Deal was a passenger for Virginia from the west yesterday morning and returned here last evening and remained over.

The local sleeper will make its last trip to-night for the winter. Travel on the night train does not warrant its continuance.

The proposition to incorporate the town of Truckee was defeated at a late special election, the vote standing 44 in favor of and 145 against.

Judge Conlan issued seven warrants in San Francisco, on Tuesday, for the arrest of tobacco dealers for having slot machines on their counters.

Take your family to the play of the "Black Flag" on Friday night. It will be a treat and the popular prices will afford an evening's pleasure at little cost.

The A. O. U. W. Lodge at its meeting on Tuesday evening admitted nineteen new members. This beneficial and insurance order is becoming very popular.

General Fowning returned from California yesterday morning. He expects to leave for San Francisco next week and will probably spend the winter in that city.

Henry Ritter's noonday lunches are always superior and appetizing. All of the novelties known to the trade in hot and fancy drinks can be obtained. Tamales every evening.

Herman Ash, after many years' residence in Reno, will leave for San Francisco on Saturday evening. His family will accompany him. They will probably reside in the city.

Block & Clausen's Washoe Lunch Counter is the most popular eating stand in town. Their table is served with all of the delicacies the market affords and their prices are within the reach of all.

The Chosen Friends Lodge held one of its pleasant social meetings last evening. This order combines pleasure with duty and its lodge sessions are always attractive and interesting. It is one of the most progressive orders in Reno.

One of the Berkeley freshman football team received a blow on the head early in the game at Reno, Nev., last Saturday, and thereafter played on until the end effectively and gamely, but with no consciousness of what was going on about him.—Bulletin.

The Nevada Hardware Company has a fine display of lamps in their show window. In addition to this their assortment of crockery, glass and queensware is immense. If a Christmas present is to be selected there is no better place to go.

Mrs. George De La Matry, who has been visiting friends in Reno, the past three months, departed Tuesday night, for Fremont, Neb., on an extended visit to her son. Mrs. De La Matry will visit in New York, Wisconsin and other eastern points before returning.

Hon. J. M. Sanford, one of the solid citizens of Churchill county, and his son-in-law, Mr. Harmon, returned from Carson last night, where they were attending to land matters. They report Churchill as prosperous in consequence of the advance in beef, grain and wool.

S. Jacobs is prepared for the holiday trade. He has marked his goods down so that most any purchaser can find something, and the variety of men's and boys' wear to select from is complete. He has many things that are useful and appropriate for Christmas presents.

Dan Boyd's books showed yesterday afternoon that as many taxpayers had paid their taxes within four, as on the corresponding date of last year, but the aggregate amount is not nearly so large, the payments having been all small. Next Monday is the last day of grace and all should govern themselves accordingly.

The Western Union Company will not bring out the President's message this year as arrangements have been made by the Administration direct with the Press Association. This is another illustration of the power of the trusts over the Administration. Even the official message of the President cannot be given to the people through the customary channels, but is handed over to the Press Trust to be distributed to its subscribers first and the rest of the people can wait. In place of McKinley being the servant of the people he is rapidly assuming the position of a dictator.

FOOLED 'EM.

Married to keep the Office in the family.

At Omaha, Nebraska, Prof. Laughlin, who has been principal of the high school and Miss Alice Thomason, who had been his assistant, were married this week. He was a Republican and she of the Populist faith.

This fall Prof. Laughlin became a candidate for superintendent of public instruction in Butte county. The Populists indicted Miss Thomason to accept their nomination. They thought it would be a good joke to defeat Laughlin with the young lady. They now admit that they believe after all the young lady's contribution much to induce them to select her, though they did not realize it at the time.

The campaign became quite animated. Miss Thomason made some speeches in opposition to Laughlin and the fight was spirited. A rumor was circulated that Miss Thomason and Prof. Laughlin had put up a job on the Republicans and Populists, and that no matter which one was elected they would keep the position in the family by immediately marrying as soon as the election was over. The Populists were furious and went to Miss Thomason, who denied the story. On the eve of election, when it was too late for the Populists to recover from the trick and select a new candidate, Miss Thomason withdrew from the race. As her husband to be had no opposition he was elected. The next day cards announcing their approaching marriage were sent out. Both now admit that they intended to be married all the time, but thought all was fair in politics, and took this method of being sure of the position they coveted, and the story is that Miss Thomason withdrew from the race in consideration that Laughlin should marry her if he was elected.—Ex.

Grand Jury Report.

To Hon. A. L. Cheney, Judge of Second Judicial District in and for Washoe County.—The Grand Jury beg leave to make the following report:

We have examined into five cases and have found a true bill against Wm. Hammermith for burglary, also a true bill against Peter M. Baum for obtaining money under false pretenses.

In the matter of the alleged assault to kill which occurred at Olinghouse Canyon in this county about October 20, 1897, we have examined a number of witnesses and endeavored to get all the evidence possible. There being no witnesses to the shooting except the principals, McClaugh and Williams, and their testimony being exactly contrary to each other the jury finally, after discussion, ignored the charge against both parties.

In the matter of the charge against Geo. Nelson for illegal voting, the charge was ignored after all of the testimony in the case had been presented.

In the matter of the charge of burglary against Philip Kearney, after careful inquiry the charge was ignored. This completes all business to which the attention of the jury was called and the jury now awaits the further pleasure of the Court.

Death of W. J. Hollingsworth.

W. J. Hollingsworth, a well known resident of Reno, died at an early hour yesterday morning. Mr. Hollingsworth has been ill for some weeks suffering from kidney and bladder complications, but his condition was not considered serious until a few days ago, when a change occurred for the worse and he failed very rapidly.

Mr. Hollingsworth was a quiet, hard working man and a good citizen, and had many friends in Western Nevada who will be pained to hear of his death. He leaves a wife and family, with whom the community will deeply sympathize in this hour of bereavement.

The funeral will take place from the family residence on Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

Miss Yoshi Yamaguchi at Yale.

An innovation in the co-ed department of Yale has just appeared. Miss Yoshi Yamaguchi and her brother, Lei Ichi Yamaguchi, have come from Kyoto to Yale to complete their education. Both have studied at Doshisha University, one of the leading schools of Japan.

Miss Yoshi intends to make a specialty of English and music. The first appearance of the little Japanese woman almost created a panic among the under graduates, who dodged around the corners to get a glimpse of the latest advent of the new woman. She wears native costume, which the students describe as like a pair of black pajamas.

Will Play at Wadsworth.

Mr. O'Sullivan of the University Minstrels visited Wadsworth and perfected all arrangements for the appearance of the students there next Saturday evening.

A street parade will be one of the features of the day and the Wadsworth people may be assured of witnessing a minstrel performance equal to that given by many of the star attractions on the road.

Wadsworth should encourage the boys by giving them a rousing house and in return the students will give a splendid entertainment.

Funeral Notice.

The funeral of the late W. J. Hollingsworth will take place from the family residence on the corner of Chestnut and Fifth streets on Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

District Court.

The principal business in the District Court yesterday was receiving the report of the Grand Jury, which will be found in this issue.

The defendants, Hammersmith and Baum, against whom indictments were found will be arraigned this morning and the date of their trials set and the amount of bail in each case determined.

KNEW EVERYTHING.

A WONDERFUL OLD MAN WHO PUZZLED HIS TRAVELING COMPANIONS.

He Was Tested Thoroughly on All Subjects From the Largest to the Smallest. He Puzzled All the Experts in Discussions of Their Several Specialties.

A wonderful old man who appears to be the very fountain of knowledge has been traveling regularly between Buffalo and New York and New York and Buffalo.

When the train left Buffalo for New York the other day, one of four men in a smoking compartment said, "Have a Mexican cigarette?" and passed the package around. "Notice," he added, "the Mexicans have cigarette pictures, too, but instead of airy fairies of the stage they rejoice in the likenesses of bishops and saints."

The wonderful old man here manifested himself by saying Mexican cigarette packages also contained pictures of actresses and bullfighters, and when one of the passengers told about having read a book which claimed the ancient Mexicans were the ten lost tribes he did not reply until he had named the most famous matadores and Spanish footlight favorites. Then he said: "The ten lost tribes, as well as Judah and Benjamin, were swallowed up in the surrounding people. The modern Jew is not a Jew at all, according to the latest research. During the latter Roman empire the converts to Judaism, or early Christianity, became a clan, owing to persecution, assumed a type from intermarriage, and their descendants call themselves Jews."

"A friend of mine," said the man who smoked the Mexican cigarettes, "told me he saw in Sonora Indians with blue eyes and yellow hair!"

"Quite right," said the old man. "They are Scotch Indians."

He then explained that 150 years ago a great hunting and mine prospecting party of Scotchmen passed many years in Sonora and took into themselves Indian wives; hence the Scotch Indians.

In the conversation about Mexico the mysterious man illustrated his discourse with words and sentences from the Aztec, Maya and Apache tongues. The conversation turning to the subject of languages the old man amused his fellow travelers with examples of Volapuk. With reference to English he declared that, oddly enough, New York English is less like the English of Shakespeare than modern Greek resembles the classic language. The purest English spoken today—that is, English that Shakespeare would understand—he declared, is among the peasants of Ireland. What we call the Irish brogue is the nearest to the way Shakespeare pronounced English.

On scientific, mechanical, historical and religious subjects the old man was a wonder. A physician talked with him and said he had a medical training, a railway man insisted that he was an officer of a railway, a lawyer declared he was a great lawyer or perhaps a judge and, to the confusion of these theories, the learned traveler was equally at home in describing the Klondike region and telling about Egyptian, Babylonian and Assyrian tablets.

The identity of the mysterious man of learning became a topic in the Pullman. There was no name on his baggage. Preparatory to offering bets on the old man's business or profession: a drummer talked to him about the state of trade. The drummer then offered to bet he was the president of some big corporation, but the way he recited the family tree of Prince Henri of Orleans baffled the travelers. An electrical engineer was persuaded to drop in and talk and told the now extremely curious passengers, "He knows more about electricity than I do."

Indeed, here was a man who seemed informed on every conceivable subject from ancient history to the latest news of the stage, who discoursed on art with refinement and knew all about famous murder cases and the profit in shoes. A remarkable knowledge of every way gold has been found seemed to give it tip, but when he displayed absolute mastery of aerodynamics the puzzled passengers gave it up.

"We have been extremely entertained by your wonderful knowledge," said the drummer boldly as the train neared New York. "Would you mind telling us what university you are the president of?"

The learned man smiled as he replied, "I have never been inside a university in my life."

"Then you are a distinguished savant or perhaps a doctor of divinity. I have never met a greater student!"

"Never studied in my life!"

"Pardon me," exclaimed the baffled drummer, "if I ask you who you are?"

"There is nothing remarkable about me," replied the man of mystery, turning to the travelers who crowded forward, "except that I am the man who remembers what he reads in the daily newspapers."—New York Journal.

Steel Barrels.

The manufacture of steel barrels is a new industry lately established near London. The difficulty of giving the steel sheet the ordinary barrel shape is overcome by easing the curved rolls at the ends so that they bear only in the middle, thus stretching the metal at the center and forming the barrel body complete, with the exception of shearing the ends straight in a special machine and welding the seam. The welding is done by electrically melting pieces of steel over the opening and hammering them down. The heads are cut in a circular shearing machine, corrugated and dished in a 400 ton hydraulic press and scored in place by a ring of metal which is welded both to the end of the barrel and the head. The bung bosses are also welded on, no skilled labor being required for the process and but moderate power is needed to supply the current.

Messrs. Muller & Stampf of the Fabst Agency carry an excellent stock of wines and liquors. The wines are especially adapted for medicinal purposes. Orders filled in quantities to suit and all goods guaranteed.

Universal cook and heating stoves, and cheaper grades sold at cost to reduce stock at Lange & Schmitt's.
